CMA Corporation to focus on metal recycling and demolition technologies at QME

CMA Corporation, a leading Australian-based metal recycling and demolition group with operations on three continents, will focus on its technologies on Stand 6320 during the 2008 Queensland Mining and Engineering (QME) exhibition at the Mackay Showground from July 22-24.

CMA Corporation specialises in:

- metal recycling services with activities including recovery, recycling, processing and testing of scrap metal, recycling of fluorescent tubes and lamps and the treatment of mercury waste, de-zincing of galvanised steel and manufacturing of non-ferrous ingots.
- demolition services through its demolition arm, CMA Contracting, using “unique engineered collapse techniques” for safe large-scale industrial demolitions, resource sector plant deconstruction and site clearance with projects including steel works, cement plants, chemical plants, mine sites and commercial buildings
- remediation services which aim to return industrial sites to a natural or reusable state by removing and treating contaminated soil or by capping and reinstating a site
- asbestos removal services, often for facility abatement projects (for example, abandoned asbestos mines, steel beam insulation and water heaters) and for projects that involve both asbestos removal and contaminant concerns such as hazardous materials and polychlorinated biphenyl (PCB)
- plant closure projects including providing consulting services, estimates and budgets and practical site decommissioning, demolition, remediation, rehabilitation and environmental clean-ups
- marine contracting services including installation and removal of piles, removal of bridges, piers and jetties, dredging of ports and waterways and river sediment remediation
