Integrity Sampling offers drug and alcohol management solutions at QME

Integrity Sampling will display its drug detection system on Stand 2112 during the 2008 Queensland Mining and Engineering (QME) exhibition at the Mackay Showground from July 22-24.

Integrity Sampling uses the Cozart Drug Detection System (DDS), an innovative, market-leading technology in on-site saliva drug testing.

It is used in a wide range of industries from mining and heavy transport to police services world-wide, and is currently used for roadside testing by Australian state police.

The DDS system accurately interprets and stores the test results that are displayed on the screen and then printed with date and time.

Integrity's Queensland state manager, Cameron Stuart, said onsite saliva analysis was the future of drug testing.

"The key benefit of saliva testing is that it identifies recent use," said Stuart. "The same cannot be said for urine analysis as by the time the drug concentration is detectable within urine the 'high' (period within which an employee's faculties could be affected by the drug) may have passed.

"Urine establishes very little, if anything, so far as an employee's ability to present 'fit for work'. In addition the collection process is susceptible to adulteration and substitution. Urinalysis is becoming outdated technology," he said.

Integrity Sampling also combines drug and alcohol education with the most effective deterrent testing programs available.

Its service model is compliant with Australian Standard AS4760 for on-site oral fluid testing.
